

Teach Sonny the Facts of Wife

My aunt the Contessa always says, "If a mother wants her son to have a good wife she must teach him to be a good husband."

For, according to her, if he is not taught he will not be able to make a proper selection of the women who will be throwing themselves at his feet.

What constitutes a good husband? The most important question—and the one overlooked by many mothers—when do you start your son's training toward being a good husband? Last things first.

You start your son's training as soon as he becomes aware that girls are different from boys. His training is to encompass all phases of marriage. More mothers should teach sons how to properly do housework. Not to help the wife, but to be able to ascertain whether the girl he will marry is capable of caring for his home.

There's nothing wrong with a son learning through actual practice, how to scrub floors or how to make a bed properly, clean windows, polish furniture, spot cobwebs on the ceiling, sweep carpets and keep those bathroom wash basins clean. And, for goodness sakes, let him be sure she uses some sort of cleaning solution in those toilet bowls.

He must also be taught how to care for his father's clothes, find out why your wash comes out white, the amount of starch you use, how you get those wrinkles out when you iron, and how you check for those missing buttons.

After that comes an even more important bit of his training: how to cook, Teach him everything there is to know about it if he is to live on something else besides hamburgers or meat- loaf.

Knowing how to take care for his own needs, he won't be forced into marriage out of desperation, when in some low moment he awakes from a sound sleep, looks at his gray sheets, his soiled towels, the dusty furniture, clothes all over the place and dishes piled weeks high in the sink.

If you son's future is ruined you can blame only yourself. For every mother who is interested in her daughter making a good marriage and trains her accordingly, you can count on hundreds of others who couldn't care less about what their daughters do as long as they get them out of the house as soon as they're old enough.

Marriage is a business. No employer could possibly hire employees to work for him unless he knew what the job requirements were.

Then why should you expect your son to take on a wife unless he knows enough about what she must do to be able to screen her. Isn't that common sense?

Operation 'Big Dip' Expanded

Three more county swimming pools have been added to "Operation Big Dip," a program initiated by Supervisor Kenneth Hahn to provide free swimming instruction.

More than 1,400 youngsters are receiving the free lessons, Hahn said, as the program enters its fourth week. The three new pools are
